This exhibition will be the first of the ICA's solo artist project series. Similar to the Institute's artist-directed retrospectives, these projects are intended to showcase a single artist's work, and can be either new work or older work, as the artist decides to exhibit after being offered the opportunity.

The Institute of Contemporary Art, Baltimore is a new roving institution founded in 2011 focused on identifying artists in the Mid-Atlantic region for career-spanning exhibitions of their work. Once chosen for their artist-directed retrospectives, these artists are encouraged to consider their whole body of work, under what conditions it would best be shown, and what resources would need to be marshaled. The ICA works with the artist to make this vision a reality. Together with occasional one-off projects by local, national and international artists, the ICA disregards the institution as cultural gatekeeper and asserts the primacy of the artist and the ability of the individual (or group) to achieve a singular vision.

We deeply appreciate the support of our donors and media sponsors who make Free Fall Baltimore possible.
