Seth Crawford, Taurus, has lived and worked in Baltimore since missing a connecting flight in 2007. He received a BFA from The University of Wisconsin - Stout and an MFA from the Rinehart School of Sculpture at the Maryland Institute College of Art. He likes pizza and movies.

As a continuation of his recombinant pastiche of everything, he will present seven or so dreamy, funny and dumb recent sculptures which touch on the middle school mystic, teaching Hamlet, and cosmological animals.

This exhibition will be the third of the ICA Baltimore's solo artist project series, and its first collaboration with Gallery CA. Similar to the Institute's artist-directed retrospectives, these projects are intended to showcase a single artist's work.

The Institute of Contemporary Art, Baltimore is a new roving institution founded in 2011 focused on identifying artists in the Mid-Atlantic region for career-spanning exhibitions of their work. Once chosen for their artist-directed retrospectives, these artists are encouraged to consider their whole body of work, under what conditions it would best be shown, and what resources would need to be marshaled. The ICA works with the artist to make this vision a reality. Together with occasional one-off projects by local, national and international artists, the ICA disregards the institution as cultural gatekeeper and asserts the primacy of the artist and the ability of the individual (or group) to achieve a singular vision.
